Hello, I live near a fish farm on the D,entrecasteaux channel. I'm have noticed a decline in dolphin presence because the noise drives dolphins away, it's how the Japanese heard them as the hate noise it disturbs them greatly. Everywhere else in the world is adopting land based farming as the excess nutrients in the water promote bacterial and algae and greatly interferes with the natural system. Land based farming is completely possible and not hard to achieve but the companies won't take this step unless the government authorities press the matter. Once government insists upon a change everyone will be happy as the salmon can be farmed properly and it won't interfere with the magnificent clean environment that Tasmania is renowned for and what the tourists come for. Please insist on a change to land based farming for everyone's interests and don't let lazy corporations just lag behind for the sake of unwanted change.
